OKYEAME - UHEMAA

The above image is of an Akan Ohene (King). Standing next to the Ohene is the Okyeame, the Ohene’s spokesperson, holding an okyeame poma (spokesperson’s staff). In Akan culture, one typically does not speak directly to the Ohene, for the Ohene is seen as Divine. Those who would like to address the Ohene speak to the okyeame, who in turn relays the message to the Ohene. The Ohene gives his response to the okyeame and then the okyeame relays that response to the individual. The okyeame is the mouthpiece and ‘linguist’ of the Ohene. From the Asante-Fante Dictionary [1881 edition]:

[aw’-chay-ah’-may or aw-chah’-ee-mee]

The okyeame also receives and deflects negative spiritual energy that may be directed to the Ohene by malevolent individuals. The okyeame thus has critical political and spiritual functions. All communication to and from the Ohene go through the okyeame.
The term okyeame is the Akan vocalization of uhemaa. The ‘ky’ combination pronounced like the ‘ch’ in the english term ‘check’ is represented by the ‘h’ in the term uhem aa. Some Afurakanu/Afuraitkaitnut (Africans) pronounce the ‘h’ sound as ‘ch’ depending upon the dialect. [This practice has been retained in common ‘African-American’ forms of speech. Some will thus pronounce the phrase ‘right here’ as ‘right chee’ah’. The ‘h’ is pronounced ‘ch’. This dialectical variant is common in words where ‘h’ is followed by an ‘i’ or ‘e’.]

The uhem is the one who repeats, narrates, records, recounts. The uhemaa (plural) recite spells for the spiritual protection of Ra, the Creator, against Apep - the enemy of Ra. The uhem nesu is the King’s spokesperson, mouthpiece. The uhem aa is the great recorder. This is the function and title of Tehuti, the spokesperson and ‘linguist’ of Amen and Ra.

Tehuti executes the role of the spokesperson, mouthpiece and linguist of Amen and Ra. Moreover, Seshat functions as the spokesperson of Amenet and Rait* – just as Akan Ahemmaa (Queens) have their own spokespersons as well. Tehuti is the original Uhemaa – Okyeame and is the patron Obosom (Deity) of all Akyeame. Tehuti is called Brekyirihunuade in Akan – the all-knowing, omniscient, wise One.

[*Amen and Amenet are the Great Father and Great Mother Who comprise the Supreme Being while Ra and Rait are the Creator and Creatress Who serve Amenet and Amen. In Akan culture Amen and Amenet are called Nyame and Nyamewaa. Ra and Rait are called Nyankopon and Nyankonton.]

The okyeame in the body is the pineal gland, the light sensitive gland which secretes hormones (directives) according to the dictates of the brain. The pineal gland is the physical seat of the Akh or Akhu – the aspect of the spiritual anatomy of Afurakanu/Afuraitkaitnut (Africans) which governs our capacity for intuition – insight, knowledge (nhumu and ohu in Akan) of what is real, genuine, true spiritually and physically. This is why the Spiritually Cultivated Ancestresses and Ancestors are called Aakhut and Aakhu. Note that the determinative medut (hieroglyph) is the crested Habui (Ibis) bird – the akyeneboa (animal totem) of Tehuti the Obosom of Divine Wisdom and Divine Speech. Aakhut is also a title for the Eye of Ra or Heru (so-called ‘third eye’) – the eye of insight and spiritual protection.
The Akan court communicative structure, Ohene and okyeame, replicates the court communicative structure of the spirit realm, Amen and Tehuti, as well as the spiritual anatomy and physical anatomy of the Afurakani/Afuraitkaitnit (African~Black) body. The okyeame is uhema, the great recorder, interpreter. The role of okyeame is also carried out by the spokesperson of an individual who is possessed by an Obosom (Deity) in the ritual practices of Akanso Nanasom - Ancient Authentic Akan Ancestral Religion. When the spirit of an Obosom possesses or enters the body of an okomfo or obosomfo (priest), an attendant functioning as okyeame, walks with the possessed individual. The Obosom speaks to the okyeame and the okyeame communicates to the community what the Obosom relays.
